Processing Information: The Alfred Blalock Collection was organized and cataloged by Harold Kanarek in 1982 with assistance from Catherine Maggiore and Elizabeth Maze. Rodney Carter completed the data entry of the correspondence series. The processing project was supported by a grant from the NIH National Library of Medicine (LM 03594). Since the original processing project was completed, additional materials have been described by Medical Archives staff, Phoebe Evans Letocha, Marjorie Winslow Kehoe, and Tim Wisniewski.

Collection Overview

Extent: 60 linear feet

Creator: Blalock, Alfred, 1899-1964.

Administrative/Biographical History:

Alfred Blalock was born in Culloden, Georgia. He received his A.B. in 1918 from the University of Georgia and his M.D. in 1922 from the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine. Blalock continued at The Johns Hopkins Hospital as an intern in urology, assistant resident in surgery, and externe in otolaryngology. In 1925, Blalock became the first chief resident in surgery at Vanderbilt University Hospital, and later joined the faculty of the Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, where he did pioneering work on the nature and treatment of hemorrhagic and traumatic shock. He demonstrated that surgical shock resulted primarily from the loss of blood and he encouraged the use of plasma or whole-blood transfusions as treatment following the onset of shock. This work is credited with saving the lives of many casualties during World War II. In 1941, he returned to Johns Hopkins as professor and director of surgery at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine and surgeon-in-chief of the hospital, positions he held until his retirement in 1964. In 1944, Blalock collaborated with Helen Taussig and Vivien Thomas to develop the "blue baby" operation, a means to improve the flow of oxygen into the blood of babies born with a heart condition called Tetralogy of Fallot. The procedure connected one of the heart's major arteries with another feeding into the lungs. It not only helped save the lives of thousands of children around the world but also opened the door to now-familiar procedures like coronary bypass surgery. While at Johns Hopkins, he worked for the establishment of the Children's Medical and Surgical Center. Blalock received numerous awards, including the Lasker Award, for his outstanding surgical contributions. He was nominated several times for the Nobel Prize in medicine. In 1964, the clinical science building was renamed in his honor at the seventy-fifth anniversary celebration of the Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Chronology: 1918-1922 - Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, student
1922-1925, 1941-1964 - Johns Hopkins Hospital
1941-1964 - Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine

Scope and Content:

The Alfred Blalock Collection concentrates on Blalock's surgical career at Johns Hopkins. It mainly consists of correspondence and medical documentation. The correspondence is with colleagues, students, institutions, and associations from the 1940s and 1950s. The section on medical documentation includes illustrations, photographs, and films. Patient material includes operation card files on 1500 cardiac cases, patient files, and information on professional fees. This collection is a significant resource for studying the early development of cardiac surgery.

Additional Information about the Collection:

A Web-based exhibit on the "blue baby" operation contains further information about the development of the procedure and Blalock's role.

Item 172043: External cardiac massage / Smith, Kline & French Laboratories ; produced by Visual Projects, Ltd. - 1961

Creator: Jude, James R.; Knickerbocker, G. Guy; Kouwenhoven, W. B. (William Bennett), 1886-1975; Smith, Kline & French Laboratories; Thomas, Vivien T., 1910-1985.; Visual Projects, Ltd.

Scope and Content: This program demonstrates a method of applying external cardiac massage. This technique utilizes manual application of a rhythmic pressure to the patient's lower sternum with simultaneous ventilation to the lungs for the purpose of restoring artificially oxygenated blood to the head. The program employs several methods to achieve its objective of demonstrating this technique. First, external cardiac massage is demonstrated on what appears to be a plastic model of the human body. Then, two of the principal developers of the technique, Professor W. B. Kouwenhoven and Dr. James R. Jude, discuss and demonstrate external cardiac massage. Professor Kouwenhoven demonstrates successful external cardiac massage on a dog who has sustained a cardiac arrest following an electric shock whereas Dr. Jude demonstrates on two live models, a man and a woman who have not sustained cardiac arrest. Surgical technician Vivien Thomas (unidentified in the film) briefly demonstrates the dog's healthy condition following resuscitation. External cardiac massage is also demonstrated during a simulated house call for a man suffering a cardiac arrest to illustrate the technique and procedure to be followed both out of the hospital and in the emergency room. In addition, the technique is demonstrated on a doll to illustrate the proper procedure for resuscitation of a child. Moreover, external cardiac massage is demonstrated on a live child who has not sustained a cardiac arrest. Dr. Jude summarizes the results of 100 cases of cardiac arrest for which external cardiac massage is employed. Sixty-two percent of these cases are resuscitated to their pre-arrest central nervous system and cardiac status. The program concludes with an interview between Dr. Jude and a 46-year-old man who had experienced a successful resuscitation.

Item 185277: Surgical treatment of coarctation of the aorta / Alfred Blalock, M.D. and Henry T. Bahnson, M.D. - 1947

Creator: Bahnson, Henry T., 1920-; Blalock, Alfred, 1899-1964.; Parker, Delbert

Extent: 1 film reel (ca. 33 min., 850 ft.) : sil., col. ; 16 mm. answer print.; 1 film reel (ca. 33 min., 850 ft.) : sil., col. ; 16 mm. internegative.; 1 film reel (ca. 33 min., 850 ft.) : sil., col. ; 16 mm. original reversal pos.; 2 film reels (ca. 29 min., ca. 700 ft.) : sil., col. ; 16 mm. duplicate reversal pos. (incomplete print)

Scope and Content: This instructional film describes a surgical procedure developed to treat coarctation of the aorta, a congenital heart defect. The film shows a pre-operative 13 year old girl with blood pressure of 40/90 in the arms and no pressure obtainable in the legs, with maximum oscillation of 9mm in the arms and 1mm in the legs. The complete surgical procedure is then shown with a succession of explanatory inter-titles. The film concludes with a follow-up examination of the patient nineteen days after the operation, showing blood pressure in the arms of 105/65, with a maximum oscillation of 6mm, and a 120/80 in the legs with oscillation equal to that in the arms.
