Processing Information: Records of the Carnegie Institution of Washington Department of Embryology were organized and cataloged by Gerard Shorb in 1981. In 2008, Medical Archives student employees Erin Donohue converted the collection inventory into the Medical Archives catalog and Katie Hindmarch-Watson described the collection based on Describing Archives: A Content Standard (DACS), under the direction of Phoebe Evans Letocha.

Collection Overview

Creator: Carnegie Institution of Washington. Dept. of Embryology.

Administrative/Biographical History:

The Carnegie Institution of Washington Department of Embryology was established in December 1914. The Carnegie Institution of Washington's parent organization was the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Learning (Later the Carnegie Corporation); The Department of Embryology was one of numerous research projects operating under its rubric. While a separate entity from Johns Hopkins, the Department of Embryology was affiliated with the Medical School's Anatomy Department and enjoyed a close working relationship with faculty, staff, and fellows. It was originally located in the Anatomy building of the Johns Hopkins Medical campus in Baltimore, MD. In 1960 it moved to the Johns Hopkins University Homewood campus in Baltimore's Charles Village.

The Department of Embryology's main focus between its inception and 1940 involved tracking developmental stages of normal human embryonic growth and locating the nature and cause of embryonic pathologies. The Department was responsible for many early breakthroughs in embryonic development, and its records provide rich source material for the history of the field.

The first director of the Department of Embryology was Professor Franklin P. Mall of the Johns Hopkins Medical School. Dr. Mall became a proponent of the idea of an institution devoted solely to research in embryology after studying under Carl Ludwig and Wilhelm His in Germany. By 1914 he had amassed a collection of nearly 2,000 embryos, and the new department secured permanence for this collection and expanded upon it. After Dr. Mall's death in 1917, the directorship passed to Dr. George L. Streeter, who Mall had recruited as a Research Associate from the University of Michigan. Streeter headed the Department for 23 years and personally contributed to every major topic in the field except experimental embryology. Dr. Streeter resigned in 1940 and was succeeded by Dr. George W. Corner, Sr. Dr. Corner was a graduate of Johns Hopkins Medical School (1913). Prior to his appointment as Director he had been a professor of anatomy at the University of Rochester.

Scope and Content:

The majority of the Collection consists of the personal and professional correspondence of the Directors relating to the Department of Embryology's administration, finances, and scientific research. A substantial amount of the Collection consists of Mall's correspondence prior to 1914 and as such provides information pertaining to his early ideas on embryology and anatomy. Dr. Streeter's correspondence between 1917 and 1940 comprises the bulk of Collections material. In addition, the Collection consists of the Department's scientific, financial and administrative records, official reports, photographs, and notes and financial records pertaining to the Anatomical Journal Trust.

Custodial History:

The bulk of the papers of the Carnegie Institution of Washington Department of Embryology from the years 1914 to 1940 were transferred on loan to the Alan Mason Chesney Medical Archives of the Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions in 1984. A smaller batch of correspondence, photographs, scientific records and reprints was transferred in 1986 and these have been organized and indexed as an addendum to the main collection.
